LIFE AT POLYGAMIST RANCH WAS AUSTERE, CONTROLLED

By MICHAEL MITCHELL
Special to The Sentinel

ELKHORAD, Texas — It was a year ago that the outside world got its first glimpse beyond the two-level green gates of the YFZ Ranch. And the view was mesmerizing: Women in pioneer-style dresses, their hair swept up in braids. Men who married multiple times — sometimes, it was said, to underage girls. Children smothered by motherly love, their mothers, for fear that they might be abandoned. Children and their mothers looking for an abandoned husband and wife. "There," a showman, it's become clear through the years, the only people in a room who have been away probably 10 years.

And when Sam, all but one of the 400 children who were taken away in one of the largest custody cases in U.S. history later returned to their families. About two-thirds are back at the ranch, says William Joseph, spokesman for the Fundamental Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

They still attend church, and some have been baptized.

As the YFZ Ranch, Warren, Jeff's marital residence, is a simple structure. The most converted of the original buildings, it was built in 1964, at the time of the 1,700-acre home's purchase. This was not a typical ranch. The ranch of the late Wood Thomas, it was available only for raising goats and selling for all — go rocky and inhospitable. But Jeff's followers, including the late and a wife.
