21. General architectural description: This is a simple wood frame house with a primary hipped roof. The hipped roof ridge runs generally east/west and the principal façade faces generally north. The principal façade is divided into two sections; the left has horizontal siding and the right is brick. The wall plane remains continuous across the material change. Two double hung windows are located to each side of the field of horizontal siding. A large picture window, flanked by double hung on each side, is centered on the brick wall. The western corner of the brick wall is recessed under the main roof form, creating an entry porch. The entry door faces the street and sits in the corner of the ell. A concrete landing infills the recess corner and three steps run to grade from the line of the main wall. The roof overhang is unsupported. A hipped roof carport is applied to the west side of the main form and sits well back from the front, creating a jog in the hipped roof ridge. The peak of the carport hip also steps up slightly, appearing as a small peak in the front roof plane. The west side of the carport roof is supported by three pipe columns which are enclosed in a wall which stops short of the eave. The rear of the carport is closed and a shallow volume extends off the rear to the south.
22. Architectural style/building type: Ranch Type
23. Landscaping or special setting features: A large street tree sits on the edge of the lawn and the driveway runs to the carport on the west. Several shrubs and trees front the house; otherwise the yard is predominantly lawn.

39. Area(s) of significance: Architecture, Community Development and Planning
40. Period of significance: 1952; 1943 to 1957 Uranium Boom
41. Level of significance: National State Local
42. Statement of significance: The development in this area is a direct result of the nation's involvement in WWII and the drive for the development of nuclear weapons. The discovery of significant sources of Uranium in the region initiated development in Grand Junction that supported both the mining of the materials and the administration of programs related to the development of weapons. The building types, materials and neighborhood layout are all indicative of the national trends which were driven by the proliferation of the automobile and the enormous demand for single family homes. House designs departed from the romantic and revival styles that were prevalent in the earlier part of the 20th century and took on a California inspired design that was characterized by simple horizontally proportioned forms. Houses were typically mass produced on previously undeveloped tracts of land at the periphery of earlier development. These groups of houses were typically based on one or two plan types with a limited number of roof and exterior finish variations, further reinforcing the characteristics of mass production. In this particular subdivision there are examples of both repetitive house types and more high style individualized houses. The curvilinear street layout is characteristic of national planning trends and is unusual in this community, where new development tended to extend the existing street grid.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance: Alterations have had a minor impact on the integrity of the house. The house continues to contribute to the character of the neighborhood.

VII. National Register Eligibility Assessment

44. National Register eligibility field assessment:

Eligible Not Eligible Need Data

45. Is there National Register district potential? Yes No

Discuss: The Bookcliff Park Subdivision lies on the periphery of the historic city center and was originally established by single group of investors. The sites were built out to accommodate the rapid growth associated with the Uranium Boom over a short period of time. The architectural styles present in the area represent a significant concentration and continuity of dwellings and a subtle transition of styles over the building period. Few intrusions have been made into the original neighborhood and it retains a high level of integrity.
