21. General architectural description: This is a horizontally proportioned, masonry building with several additive volumes. The main ridge runs north/south and the principal façade faces east. A low pitched front gable is applied to the north end of the main façade, a lower side gable carport extends off the north side of the main volume, and shed roof addition extends off the rear of the house. The carport is open on the north and east sides and the roof is supported by simple wood posts, with a pair at the northeast corner. The front gable projection has the main entry door on the left side and three large glass panes across the remainder of the façade. Brick piers support the front gable roof on the corners and a low brick wall runs across the front at the height of the window sills. Contrasting siding infills the gable end. A pair of double hungs is centered on the remainder of the main wall to the south. The south side has two groups of three double hung windows on each end with a single double hung in the center of the gable. On this wall the brick runs all the way up to the peak of the roof.
22. Architectural style/building type: Ranch Type
23. Landscaping or special setting features: Two large street trees front the lot and the driveway runs to the carport on the north. Otherwise the yard is predominantly lawn.

39. Area(s) of significance: Architecture, Community Development and Planning

40. Period of significance: 1952; 1943 to 1957 Uranium Boom

41. Level of significance: National State Local

42. Statement of significance: The development in this area is a direct result of the nation's involvement in WWII and the drive for the development of nuclear weapons. The discovery of significant sources of Uranium in the region initiated development in Grand Junction that supported both the mining of the materials and the administration of programs related to the development of weapons. The building types, materials and neighborhood layout are all indicative of the national trends which were driven by the proliferation of the automobile and the enormous demand for single family homes. House designs departed from the romantic and revival styles that were prevalent in the earlier part of the 20th century and took on a California inspired design that was characterized by simple horizontally proportioned forms. Houses were typically mass produced on previously undeveloped tracts of land at the periphery of earlier development. These groups of houses were typically based on one or two plan types with a limited number of roof and exterior finish variations, further reinforcing the characteristics of mass production. In this particular subdivision there are examples of both repetitive house types and more high style individualized houses. The curvilinear street layout is characteristic of national planning trends and is unusual in this community, where new development tended to extend the existing street grid.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance: Alterations have had a considerable impact on the integrity of the building. The primary façade is uncharacteristically altered.

VII. National Register Eligibility Assessment

44. National Register eligibility field assessment:

Eligible Not Eligible Need Data

45. Is there National Register district potential? Yes No

Discuss: The Bookcliff Park Subdivision lies on the periphery of the historic city center and was originally established by single group of investors. The sites were built out to accommodate the rapid growth associated with the Uranium Boom over a short period of time. The architectural styles present in the area represent a significant concentration and continuity of dwellings and a subtle transition of styles over the building period. Few intrusions have been made into the original neighborhood and it retains a high level of integrity.
