21. General architectural description: This is a basically rectangular wood frame house with a moderately pitched hipped roof. The ridge runs northeast/southwest and the principal façade faces northwest. The main entry is generally centered on the length of the main façade and sits at the back of a deep recess. A section of hipped roof projects forward on the left side of the recess. A double hung sits in the center of the wall plane on the entry side of the projection. The street facing wall of the projection has two sets of three double hungs on either end of the façade and the northeast corner of the wall sets back slightly under the roof overhang, away from the street. All the windows sit on a brick sill which is continuous around the wall planes of the house. The area below the sill is brick and the area above is horizontal siding. The main volume wall has three casements centered on the remaining wall plane. The brick wainscoting continues across this wall to the wall of the garage section. A two car garage door sits in a field of horizontal siding which projects slightly from the main wall plane. The hipped roof in this section has a lower ridge and the eave extends lower over the garage door area. A concrete landing infills the recess at the door and several steps run to the grade.
22. Architectural style/building type: Ranch Type
23. Landscaping or special setting features: A single large tree sits directly in front of the house. Several shrubs and vines front the house and the wide driveway runs to the garage on the southwest side. Otherwise the yard is predominantly lawn.

The building types, materials and neighborhood layout are all indicative of the national trends which were driven by the proliferation of the automobile and the enormous demand for single family homes. House designs departed from the romantic and revival styles that were prevalent in the earlier part of the 20th century and took on a California inspired design that was characterized by simple horizontally proportioned forms. Houses were typically mass produced on previously undeveloped tracts of land at the periphery of earlier development. These groups of houses were typically based on one or two plan types with a limited number of roof and exterior finish variations, further reinforcing the characteristics of mass production. This house is an example of the more substantial and individualized homes that skirt Sherwood Park.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance: Material alterations have had a moderate impact on the integrity of the house.
