21. General architectural description: This is a simple masonry house with additions. The ridge of the hipped roof runs north/south and the principal façade faces west. The entry door is generally centered on the main wall and sits in a shallow recess. The roof overhang is supported by a sloping post, with a vertical pilaster, to the left of the door. Beyond that, a picture window, flanked by double hungs, sits off center toward the entry door. To the south a pair of double hungs sits on the corner. A single double hung is located around the corner on the south wall. A rectangular brick chimney is applied to the wall on the north side, as is a metal carport that extends off the wall to the north. The double hung windows have a single horizontal muntin in each sash. All the windows share the same sill height, and the heads run up to the soffit. The house sits on a concrete foundation and several concrete steps run up to the landing at the entry.
22. Architectural style/building type: Ranch Type
23. Landscaping or special setting features: Several large trees and shrubs are located on the lot with a single street tree near the sidewalk. The driveway runs along the north; otherwise the yard is predominantly lawn.
24. Associated buildings, features, or objects: A garage is located at the rear and is connected to the house by an enclosed porch.

39. Area(s) of significance: Architecture, Community Development and Planning

40. Period of significance: 1951; 1943 to 1957 Uranium Boom

41. Level of significance: National  State  Local

42. Statement of significance: The development in this area is a direct result of the nation's involvement in WWII and the drive for the development of nuclear weapons. The discovery of significant sources of Uranium in the region initiated development in Grand Junction that supported both the mining of the materials and the administration of programs related to the development of weapons. The building types, materials and neighborhood layout are all indicative of the national trends which were driven by the proliferation of the automobile and the enormous demand for single family homes. House designs departed from the romantic and revival styles that were prevalent in the earlier part of the 20th century and took on a California inspired design that was characterized by simple horizontally proportioned forms. Houses were typically mass produced on previously undeveloped tracts of land at the periphery of earlier development. These groups of houses were typically based on one or two plan types with a limited number of roof and exterior finish variations, further reinforcing the characteristics of mass production. In this particular subdivision there are examples of both repetitive house types and more high style individualized houses. The curvilinear street layout is characteristic of national planning trends and is unusual in this community, where new development tended to extend the existing street grid.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance: Alterations are primarily confined to the rear and sides. Integrity is somewhat compromised.

VII. National Register Eligibility Assessment

44. National Register eligibility field assessment:

Eligible  Not Eligible  Need Data

45. Is there National Register district potential? Yes  No

Discuss: The Bookcliff Park Subdivision lies on the periphery of the historic city center and was originally established by single group of investors. The sites were built out to accommodate the rapid growth associated with the Uranium Boom over a short period of time. The architectural styles present in the area represent a significant concentration and continuity of dwellings and a subtle transition of styles over the building period. Few intrusions have been made into the original neighborhood and it retains a high level of integrity.
