21. General architectural description: This is a generally rectangular wood frame house with a hipped roof. The roof has a series of stepped sections. The primary section has a long ridge that runs north/south. This primary ridge has a step down about halfway along the length toward the south; the west facing roof plane remains continuous. A second hipped section projects off the north end. This section has a lower ridge and shares the north roof plane with the main hip; it has a small gable revealed at the peak of the hip. This roof section covers a large recess, a single wood post supports the southwest corner. The post sits on a low brick wall which is a continuation of the west wall surface. A pair of windows (one picture, one double hung) sit on the north west corner of the wall. The entry door sits under the recess and faces the street (west). A large picture window is adjacent to the door on the right and has a double hung on each side. A second similar window assembly is located further along the wall to the south. The window sills align with the height of the low wall along the recess. A large rectangular brick chimney is applied to the west wall near the south corner. It penetrates the roof overhang, but the eave line runs through. The double hungs have a single horizontal muntin in each sash.
22. Architectural style/building type: Ranch Type
23. Landscaping or special setting features: The house has several shrubs that run along the perimeter and several large trees. The driveway runs to the chimney on the south; the remainder of the yard is lawn.
24. Associated buildings, features, or objects: A front gable garage is located at the rear of the site.

39. Area(s) of significance: Architecture, Community Development and Planning

40. Period of significance: 1952; 1943 to 1957 Uranium Boom

41. Level of significance: National State Local

42. Statement of significance: The development in this area is a direct result of the nation's involvement in WWII and the drive for the development of nuclear weapons. The discovery of significant sources of Uranium in the region initiated development in Grand Junction that supported both the mining of the materials and the administration of programs related to the development of weapons. The building types, materials and neighborhood layout are all indicative of the national trends which were driven by the proliferation of the automobile and the enormous demand for single family homes. House designs departed from the romantic and revival styles that were prevalent in the earlier part of the 20th century and took on a California inspired design that was characterized by simple horizontally proportioned forms. Houses were typically mass produced on previously undeveloped tracts of land at the periphery of earlier development. These groups of houses were typically based on one or two plan types with a limited number of roof and exterior finish variations, further reinforcing the characteristics of mass production. In this particular subdivision there are examples of both repetitive house types and more high style individualized houses. The curvilinear street layout is characteristic of national planning trends and is unusual in this community, where new development tended to extend the existing street grid.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance: The house appears intact in its original condition.

VII. National Register Eligibility Assessment

44. National Register eligibility field assessment:

Eligible Not Eligible Need Data

45. Is there National Register district potential? Yes No

Discuss: The Bookcliff Park Subdivision lies on the periphery of the historic city center and was originally established by single group of investors. The sites were built out to accommodate the rapid growth associated with the Uranium Boom over a short period of time. The architectural styles present in the area represent a significant concentration and continuity of dwellings and a subtle transition of styles over the building period. Few intrusions have been made into the original neighborhood and it retains a high level of integrity.
